This presentation will discuss the students’ use of personal narratives in opinion essays. Student writers often turn to personal stories in the absence of either needed or appropriate understanding of current issues, or more specific, city-related civics, or culture. Interesting and engaging examples of student writing will be exhibited and discussed. Ideas will be brainstormed how to use the insights from this presentation to help students and faculty work better together on achieving writing goals.