Problem solving in mathematics is often seen as "doing the problems in a textbook." These are often simply routine exercises on newly presented topics. Genuine problem-solving techniques are too often neglected in the instructional program. Ten problem solving techniques will be presented with very simple examples of the application (so as not to distract from the process).

Organized by: Delaram Kahrobaei and Hans Schoutens
Light refreshment will be served.